

[illegible]

A network-based method for identifying components for electrical distribution and control products includes receiving component specification information from a user and using a server to compare the received specification information with pre-stored information. The method also includes selecting at least one component which matches the received specification information and downloading to the user information related to the component.

